Tips for Researching Your East London Ancestry

When you're focusing on East London family history, keep these tips in mind:

Start with What You Know

Begin by gathering all the information you already have: names, dates, places, relationships. Talk to older relatives and collect any documents, photographs, or family stories you can.

Understand the Geographical and Social Context

Research the history of the specific East London neighbourhoods your ancestors lived in. What were the industries? What were the living conditions like? Who were their neighbours? This context is crucial for understanding their lives. For instance, researching Docklands family history will be very different from researching ancestors in the more suburban areas of Redbridge.

Utilise Online Resources in Conjunction with Local Societies

Major online genealogical platforms (like Ancestry, Findmypast, TheGenealogist) are excellent for accessing national records like census returns, birth, marriage, and death certificates. However, the EOFHS can provide the local flavour and specialised records that often fill in the gaps. Think of them as complementary resources.

Be Patient and Persistent

Genealogy is a marathon, not a sprint. You will encounter dead ends, confusing records, and names that seem to vanish. The key is to stay organised, be methodical, and don't give up!

Consider DNA Testing

While not directly managed by the EOFHS, DNA testing can sometimes provide clues and connect you with distant relatives who might have shared family trees or local knowledge of East London.

By tapping into their specialised records, attending their events, and connecting with fellow enthusiasts, you can transform a vague curiosity about your ancestors into a tangible connection with your past. Its digital format allows learners to study efficiently, organize information, and revisit content whenever necessary.

One of the key advantages of learning with East Of London Family History Society is the ability to annotate directly within the document.
