While not a definitive guide to navigating death, it offers valuable insights into the nature of existence and the potential for transformation. Understanding the Tibetan Book of the Dead: The Bardo Thodol, often translated as "Liberation through Hearing in the Intermediate State," is a collection of Buddhist teachings compiled and adapted over centuries. It's not a single text but a compilation of practices and explanations designed to assist individuals during the bardo, the intermediate state between death and rebirth. This state is believed to be a crucial period for shaping the next life and is described in detail in the text. The Bardo Thodol is not a "how-to" guide for dying. Instead, it offers a framework for understanding the process and utilizing practices for positive outcomes, most notably the development of compassion and wisdom.

The Four Bardos: Stages of Transition

The Bardo Thodol outlines four distinct bardos, each with unique challenges and opportunities.

- *Chöd-bardo: The bardo of dying.* This phase focuses on detaching from the physical body and recognizing the inevitability of death. Practices emphasize mindfulness and acceptance.
- *Kongs-bardo: The bardo of the intermediate state.* *During this phase, the consciousness encounters a vivid and often confusing array of visions and experiences. The Bardo Thodol instructs on recognizing these illusions and cultivating a calm and discerning mind.*
- *Chi-bardo: The bardo of the subtle body.* This phase involves the liberation from subtle desires, attachments, and anxieties. The practice often involves visualization and meditation to counteract negative tendencies.
- *Gshin-bardo: The bardo of rebirth.* The final stage focuses on understanding the potential for rebirth and the karmic repercussions of actions in the previous phases.

Potential Disadvantages and Alternative Perspectives:

Despite the potential benefits, several perspectives are crucial to consider:

Is the Tibetan Book of the Dead a Practical Guide?

While the Bardo Thodol is valuable from a philosophical standpoint, its efficacy as a practical guide to the transition period is debatable. There are no guarantees that following its practices will necessarily result in a positive outcome. The text itself acknowledges the profound influence of karma and the need for extensive spiritual preparation in life.

Cultural and Religious Context

The Bardo Thodol is deeply rooted in Tibetan Buddhist philosophy. Understanding its context is crucial to appreciating its teachings. The text is not a universal guide to the afterlife but a specific Buddhist approach to the dying process. Other traditions have different views on the transition and the concept of rebirth.

Scientific Perspective

Scientific perspectives on death and the afterlife differ significantly from the Bardo Thodol's. While the text acknowledges a subtle body, modern science does not support the concept of a separate, surviving consciousness. Instead, it views death as the cessation of biological processes and consciousness.

Case Study: Tibetan Buddhist Monastic Practices

While a direct application of Bardo Thodol instructions to a modern population is challenging, studying Tibetan Buddhist monastic practices can offer some insight. The rigorous meditation and mindfulness practices undertaken by monks may provide indirect benefits related to emotional control and acceptance.

Conclusion

The Bardo Thodol presents a profound and complex view of the transition between life and death. While not a practical guide in the literal sense, it offers valuable insights into the human condition, the nature of consciousness, and the potential for spiritual transformation. It's a text for contemplation and reflection, inviting individuals to consider their relationship with death and the possibility of rebirth. Understanding its cultural context and limitations is important to its proper interpretation and application.

The Tibetan View on Life and Death: A Journey Through the Bardo

Death. It's a word that often evokes a shiver, a sense of the unknown, and perhaps even fear. We spend so much of our lives trying to either avoid it or understand it, yet its true nature remains a profound mystery to many. But what if there was a tradition, steeped in ancient wisdom and profound philosophical insights, that offered a remarkably comprehensive and even comforting perspective on this ultimate transition? Enter the Tibetan Buddhist view of life and death, a rich tapestry woven with concepts of reincarnation, karma, and the revolutionary idea of the bardo.

This isn't just about the moment of physical cessation. The Tibetan understanding delves deep into the cyclical nature of existence, the continuous flow of consciousness, and the opportunities for spiritual growth that lie not just within life, but also within the transition itself. Forget grim pronouncements of judgment or an eternal void; the Tibetan perspective presents death not as an endpoint, but as a profound and transformative experience, a crucial phase in our ongoing spiritual evolution.

Understanding the Wheel of Samsara: The Cycle of Rebirth

At the heart of the Tibetan Buddhist philosophy lies the concept of Samsara, the endless cycle of birth, death, and rebirth. This isn't a linear journey but a continuous, wheel-like progression driven by our actions, intentions, and the unresolved karmic imprints we carry. Think of it like a deeply ingrained habit loop that plays out across lifetimes.

Karma: The Architect of Our Experiences

The driving force behind this cycle is karma. In Tibetan Buddhism, karma isn't a simplistic notion of good deeds leading to rewards and bad deeds to punishment. Rather, it's a principle of cause and effect, where our volitional actions (thoughts, words, and deeds) create seeds that ripen and manifest as our experiences, both in this life and in future ones. Understanding karma is crucial to understanding the Tibetan view of life and death because it explains why we experience what we do, and how our future rebirths are shaped.

Positive actions, fueled by compassion, wisdom, and generosity, tend to lead to more favorable circumstances. Conversely, actions driven by greed, hatred, and delusion create negative karmic seeds, resulting in suffering and less fortunate rebirths. This isn't about a judgmental deity, but a natural law, as fundamental as gravity, that governs the unfolding of our existence. The Tibetan perspective encourages us to take responsibility for our actions, recognizing that we are the architects of our own destinies, across many lifetimes.

The Three Realms of Existence

Within Samsara, Tibetan Buddhism describes various realms or states of existence, often depicted in the Bhavacakra, or Wheel of Life. These aren't necessarily literal physical locations but reflect different mental states and the intensity of karmic influence. They include:

1. The God Realms (Devas): Characterized by immense pleasure and long lifespans, but often lacking deep spiritual insight and prone to arrogance.
2. The Demigod Realms (Asuras): Marked by jealousy, rivalry, and constant conflict, even amidst material abundance.
3. The Human Realm: Considered the most precious, offering the perfect balance of suffering and pleasure, providing the optimal conditions for spiritual growth and enlightenment.
4. The Animal Realm: Dominated by instinct, ignorance, and the constant struggle for survival.
5. The Hungry Ghost Realm (Pretas): Characterized by insatiable cravings and frustration, always wanting but never satisfied.
6. The Hell Realms: Representing intense suffering and pain, often a result of severe negative karma.

The goal of spiritual practice in Tibetan Buddhism is not to attain a permanent place in a blissful realm, but to transcend Samsara altogether, achieving Nirvana. However, understanding these realms helps illuminate the vast spectrum of experience that karma can manifest and the importance of cultivating positive qualities to influence our future lives.

The Bardo: The Space Between Lives

Perhaps the most unique and profound aspect of the Tibetan view on life and death is the concept of the bardo. The word "bardo" (Tibetan: བར་དོ) literally translates to "intermediate state" or "gap." It refers to the transitional period between death and the next rebirth. This isn't a brief moment, but a significant period of consciousness that can last for weeks, months, or even longer, depending on individual karma and spiritual development.

The Bardo teachings, particularly those found in the Tibetan Book of the Dead (Bardo Thödol), are not meant to be frightening. Instead, they are a practical guide, offering wisdom and techniques for navigating this crucial stage. The goal is to recognize the nature of the bardo experiences, avoid falling back into unconscious patterns, and ultimately, achieve liberation from the cycle of rebirth.

The Six Bardos: A Journey of Transformation

The Tibetan tradition outlines six distinct bardos, each representing a different phase of the dying process and the intermediate state:

1. The Bardo of This Life (Chi-kai)

Bardo):

This is the bardo we are currently experiencing – the living moments of our existence. It's where we have the opportunity to cultivate wisdom, compassion, and ethical conduct, preparing ourselves for what lies ahead. The choices we make in this life are the foundation for our experience in the subsequent bardos.

2. The Bardo of the Moment of Death (Chikhai Bardo):

This is the actual process of dying, where the subtle energies and elements within the body begin to dissolve. It's characterized by a series of dissolutions, moving from grosser faculties to subtler ones, accompanied by visions and sensations. Tibetan teachings emphasize remaining aware and present during this phase.

3. The Bardo of Dharmata (Chönyi Bardo):

This is the most profound and potentially terrifying bardo, where the clear, luminous light of primal awareness, the true nature of reality (Dharmata), is experienced. This is a moment of immense opportunity for liberation. If one recognizes this light as their own true nature, they can attain enlightenment and escape Samsara. However, if one is unprepared or overwhelmed by fear, they may mistake the light for something else or be frightened away. This is where visions of peaceful and wrathful deities may appear, which are projections of one's own mind.

4. The Bardo of Becoming (Sidpa Bardo):

If liberation is not attained in the Dharmata Bardo, the consciousness then enters the Sidpa Bardo, or the bardo of becoming. This is where the consciousness begins to be drawn towards a new rebirth, influenced by lingering karmic tendencies and the desire for sensory experience. Visions of the womb, the process of conception, and the choice of a new mother may arise.

5. The Bardo of Entering the Womb (Kyene Bardo):

This bardo specifically refers to the process of entering the mother's womb and the formation of the physical body.

6. The Bardo of Awakening (Dorje Bardo):

This refers to the moment of awakening in the new life, the first conscious experience after birth.

The Bardo Thödol is traditionally read aloud to the dying person and the recently deceased to guide them through these stages. The intention is not to introduce new concepts but to remind the consciousness of what has been practiced and contemplated during life, helping them to recognize the true nature of the experiences and make skillful choices.

Living with Awareness: The Tibetan Approach to Death

The profound Tibetan understanding of life and death isn't meant to be morbid or frightening. Instead, it's a powerful invitation to live more consciously and compassionately. By contemplating death, not as an end, but as a transition, we can:

Cultivating Mindfulness and Present Moment Awareness

The emphasis on the bardo naturally cultivates a deep appreciation for the present moment. If we are to navigate the intermediate states with wisdom, we must first learn to be present in our current life. Mindfulness practices, central to Tibetan Buddhism, train the mind to observe thoughts, emotions, and sensations without judgment, building a strong foundation for clarity even in the face of intense experiences.

Practicing Compassion and Ethical Conduct

Recognizing the interconnectedness of all beings and the karmic consequences of our actions, Tibetan Buddhism places a high value on compassion (Karuna) and ethical conduct (Shila). By acting with kindness and integrity in this life, we create positive karma, which not only improves our current experience but also shapes a more favorable future, including our rebirths and our experiences in the bardo.

Preparing for the Transition

The teachings on the bardo offer a practical framework for preparing for death. This preparation involves:

1. Meditation and Contemplation: Regularly engaging in meditation helps to calm the mind and develop insight into the nature of reality. Contemplating the impermanence of all things (anicca) can reduce attachment and aversion.
2. Understanding the Bardo: Studying the Bardo teachings themselves provides a mental map for the post-death experience, reducing the element of surprise and fear.
3. Phowa (Conscious Transfer of Consciousness): This is a specific practice within Tibetan Buddhism that aims to consciously direct one's consciousness at the time of death to a pure land or a favorable rebirth.
4. Purifying Negative Karma: Practices aimed at purifying negative karmic imprints, such as confession and recitation of mantras, are encouraged.

The Ultimate Goal: Liberation from Samsara

While the bardo teachings offer a sophisticated understanding of the intermediate state and the cycle of rebirth, the ultimate aspiration in Tibetan Buddhism is to achieve Nirvana – liberation from Samsara altogether. This means breaking free from the endless cycle of suffering and attaining a state of perfect peace, wisdom, and enlightenment. The bardo, when navigated with wisdom and awareness, can be a stepping stone towards this ultimate liberation.

Conclusion: A Profound Perspective on Our Eternal Journey

The Tibetan view on life and death offers a profoundly different perspective than what is commonly encountered in Western cultures. It transforms death from a terrifying end into a significant, and even potentially beneficial, transition. By understanding the intricate workings of karma, the cyclical nature of Samsara, and the transformative potential of the bardo, we are empowered to live our lives with greater awareness, purpose, and compassion.

The Tibetan approach doesn't deny the pain and suffering inherent in life, but it reframes it within a grander cosmic narrative. It suggests that our consciousness is not extinguished at death but continues its journey, shaped by our actions and our understanding. The wisdom of the bardo is a testament to the deep contemplative traditions of Tibet, offering solace, guidance, and a path towards ultimate freedom. It reminds us that death is not an end, but merely another chapter in our unfolding, eternal journey.

The Tibetan of Life and Death: A Profound Philosophy Rooted in Spiritual Wisdom In the high-altitude valleys of Tibet, where the sky stretches endlessly and the air carries the weight of ancient wisdom, the concept of "the Tibetan of life and death" emerges not merely as a cultural practice but as a deeply philosophical way of existence. This enduring perspective transcends the ordinary understanding of mortality, embracing life and death as interwoven threads in the intricate tapestry of human experience. Rooted in Tibetan Buddhism and shaped by centuries of spiritual reflection, this worldview offers profound insights into impermanence, compassion, and the sacredness of each moment. The Tibetan understanding of life and death is anchored in the principle of impermanence—known as anicca in Buddhist thought—where all phenomena are seen as transient, constantly changing, and ultimately empty of a fixed self. Death, far from being an endpoint, is perceived as a natural transition, a passage rather than an end. This view fosters a deep acceptance of life's fleeting nature, encouraging individuals to live with greater mindfulness, gratitude, and clarity. Rather than fearing death, Tibetans often regard it as an invitation to live fully, cultivating inner peace and wisdom that guide both present actions and future liberation. Central to this philosophy is the practice of Tibetan Buddhist rituals surrounding death, which reflect a compassionate approach to the dying process. The Bardo Thodol, commonly referred to in the West as the Tibetan Book of the Dead, serves as a spiritual guide for those navigating the intermediate state between death and rebirth. Rather than a grim meditation on judgment, it offers reassurance and empowerment—highlighting that consciousness remains active in the bardo, or post-death state, and can choose its next path through intentional practice and support from loved ones. This ritual framework, grounded in reverence and care, transforms death from a source of fear into a sacred threshold. Beyond ritual, the Tibetan perspective enriches daily life by nurturing a profound sense of interconnectedness. Death reminds humanity of its shared journey, dissolving the illusion of separateness and deepening empathy. It teaches that every breath, every relationship, and every decision carries weight—shaping not only individual destiny but the collective well-being of all beings. In this light, life and death become complementary forces, each illuminating the value of the other and guiding ethical living, generosity, and spiritual growth. Applications of this worldview extend into modern life, where mindfulness, grief counseling, and end-of-life care increasingly draw from Tibetan principles. Practices such as guided meditation for the dying, compassionate presence, and rituals honoring memory and transition offer meaningful support in diverse cultural contexts. These approaches emphasize dignity, presence, and non-attachment—qualities that resonate deeply in a world often overwhelmed by anxiety and disconnection. Looking to the future, the Tibetan understanding of life and death holds growing relevance amid global challenges like aging populations, existential uncertainty, and environmental crisis. As humanity grapples with impermanence on multiple levels, this ancient wisdom offers a timeless anchor—encouraging resilience, compassion, and a more mindful relationship with time. By embracing death not as an enemy but as a teacher, individuals and communities can cultivate greater peace, purpose, and unity. Ultimately, the Tibetan of life and death invites us to live—and die—with open hearts, grounded in awareness and love. It reminds us that life is not measured by years alone but by the depth of presence we bring to each moment, and that death, though inevitable, is a gateway to deeper understanding and liberation. In honoring this sacred cycle, we find not only meaning in endings but inspiration for how to live fully in the now.

The Tibetan Tapestry of Life and Death: An In-depth Exploration

In the heart of the Himalayas, nestled amongst soaring peaks and vast, windswept plains, lies a culture deeply intertwined with the profound mysteries of existence. The Tibetan approach to life and death is not a morbid fascination with mortality, but rather a sophisticated and compassionate framework for navigating the inevitable, transforming fear into understanding and acceptance. This unique perspective, deeply rooted in Buddhist philosophy and ancient traditions, offers a powerful lens through which to examine our own transient lives and the universal experience of dying.

For centuries, Tibetan Buddhism has cultivated a nuanced understanding of consciousness, karma, and rebirth, shaping a rich tapestry of rituals, practices, and philosophical insights. This article delves into the core tenets of the Tibetan view on life and death, exploring its practical applications and offering a comparative perspective on Western attitudes towards mortality. We will uncover the wisdom embedded in their meditations on impermanence, the significance of the Bardo, and the profound role of compassion in the face of loss.

Understanding Impermanence (Anicca): The Cornerstone of Tibetan Thought

At the very foundation of the Tibetan perspective lies the concept of anicca, or impermanence. This isn't a passive resignation to fate, but an active recognition that all phenomena, from the grandest mountain range to the most fleeting thought, are in a constant state of flux. Life, in its entirety, is seen as a temporary journey, a dewdrop on a blade of grass that evaporates with the rising sun. This understanding is not meant to induce despair, but to foster a sense of urgency and appreciation for the present moment.

Tibetan teachings frequently employ vivid metaphors to illustrate this point: a river flowing ceaselessly, a flame that flickers and dies, a rainbow that appears and vanishes. By contemplating these images, practitioners are encouraged to loosen their attachment to the ephemeral and to focus on cultivating positive qualities and actions that will have lasting impact. This constant awareness of impermanence acts as a powerful antidote to the clinging and aversion that often fuel suffering in Western societies, where the illusion of permanence can lead to anxiety about loss and aging.

The Bardo: The Intermediate State Between Lives

Perhaps the most widely recognized and compelling aspect of the Tibetan approach to death is the concept of the Bardo. Derived from the Tibetan word "bardo" meaning "intermediate state" or "gap," this refers to the period between death and rebirth. The most famous of these is the Chikhai Bardo, the Bardo of Death, which begins at the moment of physical dissolution and lasts until the next incarnation. However, the Bardo is not solely about the afterlife; it is also understood as a state that can be experienced during deep meditation or even in intense moments of life.

According to Tibetan tradition, upon death, consciousness separates from the physical body. This is followed by a series of profound experiences, often described as a succession of lights, visions, and encounters with deities or wrathful beings. These are not external entities, but rather manifestations of the mind's own karmic imprints and potential. The Tibetan Book of the Dead, or Bardo Thödrol Chenmo, is a guide intended to be read to the dying and the deceased, offering instructions and guidance for navigating these experiences with wisdom and clarity.

The Different Bardos: A Deeper Dive

While the Bardo of Death is the most commonly discussed, Tibetan Buddhism outlines six Bardos:

1. The Bardo of This Life: The experiences of our waking state, filled with sensory input and mental activity.
2. The Bardo of Meditation: The state achieved during deep meditative practice, where the mind can experience clarity and subtle realities.

3. The Bardo of Dream: The often vivid and surreal experiences we have during sleep.
4. The Bardo of Dying (Chikhai Bardo): The dissolution of the physical and energetic components of the body at the moment of death.
5. The Bardo of Dharmata (Chönyi Bardo): The experience of clear light and visions of peaceful and wrathful deities, which are projections of the mind.
6. The Bardo of Becoming (Sidpa Bardo): The process of karmic impulses leading to the selection of a new birth.

The profound insight here is that the Bardo of Death and its subsequent stages are not entirely alien to our lived experience. The visions and encounters are seen as opportunities to recognize the mind's innate luminosity and to purify negative karmic imprints, thereby influencing the nature of the next rebirth.

Karma and Rebirth: The Wheel of Samsara

Central to the Tibetan understanding of life and death is the doctrine of karma, the law of cause and effect. Every action, thought, and intention creates a ripple effect, shaping our present and future experiences. Positive karma, born from compassion, generosity, and wisdom, leads to favorable circumstances and a more fortunate rebirth. Conversely, negative karma, stemming from greed, hatred, and delusion, results in suffering and less favorable circumstances.

Rebirth, or samsara, is the continuous cycle of birth, death, and reincarnation. This cycle is not seen as a punishment, but as a natural consequence of our karmic actions. The ultimate goal in Tibetan Buddhism is not merely to achieve a better rebirth, but to transcend samsara altogether and attain enlightenment, or nirvana. This liberation from the cycle of suffering is achieved by understanding the true nature of reality and eradicating the root causes of suffering.

The process of dying, therefore, is viewed as a critical juncture where the accumulated karma of a lifetime plays a significant role. The state of mind at the moment of death is paramount, as it can either propel one further into the cycle of samsara or offer an opportunity for liberation. This is why practices like meditation, prayer, and the recitation of mantras are so important in Tibetan culture, as they help to cultivate a positive and clear state of mind, both in life and in the face of death.

Rituals and Practices: Guiding the Transition

Tibetan culture is rich with rituals and practices designed to support the dying and their loved ones, as well as to guide the consciousness through the Bardo. These practices are not merely symbolic; they are deeply embedded in the belief that conscious intention and external support can profoundly influence the transition between states of existence.

The Role of the Lama and Spiritual Guidance

Lamas, or spiritual teachers, play a crucial role in the Tibetan approach to death. They provide comfort, guidance, and spiritual instruction to the dying, helping them to confront their fears and to engage with the process of death consciously. The reading of the Tibetan Book of the Dead is a prime example, with the lama acting as an interpreter and guide through the complex visions and experiences described in the text. This ensures that the deceased, if not yet fully liberated, has the best possible chance to navigate the Bardo wisely.

Mourning and Memorial Practices

Tibetan mourning practices are also distinct. While grief is acknowledged, the emphasis is often on the impermanence of life and the continuity of consciousness. Sky burials, where the body is ritually offered to vultures, are a traditional practice that reflects a deep respect for the interconnectedness of all beings and the cyclical nature of existence. Even in more modern contexts, memorial services often focus on prayers for the deceased's well-being in their next life and on continuing positive actions in their memory.

Comparing Perspectives: Tibetan Wisdom and Western Attitudes

The Tibetan approach to life and death stands in stark contrast to many Western attitudes, which often exhibit a pervasive fear of mortality. In many Western societies, death is a taboo subject, relegated to hospitals and funerals, with little emphasis on its spiritual or philosophical dimensions. This fear can lead to a denial of aging, an obsession with physical appearance, and a profound anxiety about the unknown.

The Tibetan emphasis on impermanence and the Bardo offers a powerful counterpoint. By confronting the reality of death regularly, through meditation and contemplation, individuals are encouraged to live more fully and meaningfully in the present. The understanding of karma and rebirth provides a framework for ethical living and a sense of cosmic order, mitigating the existential dread that can accompany the perceived finality of death in other cultural contexts.

Furthermore, the compassionate intention behind Tibetan death rituals, aimed at alleviating suffering and facilitating a positive rebirth, highlights a profound respect for the continuity of consciousness. This holistic view, where life and death are not separate entities but rather integral parts of a continuous journey, offers a model for a more integrated and less fearful approach to our own mortality.

Conclusion: Embracing the Tapestry of Existence

The Tibetan perspective on life and death is a testament to the enduring power of wisdom and compassion. It invites us to view our existence not as a fleeting spark, but as a continuous thread in a vast and intricate tapestry. By understanding impermanence, contemplating the Bardo, and living in accordance with the principles of karma, we can transform our relationship with death from one of fear to one of acceptance and even anticipation. This profound wisdom, cultivated over centuries in the serene landscapes of Tibet, offers invaluable insights for anyone seeking a deeper understanding of the human condition and a more meaningful way to navigate the inevitable journey of life and death.

The stream of consciousness, influenced by past actions (karma) and mental imprints, carries forward into a new existence, shaping the circumstances of the next life.
3	What role does 'karma' play in the Tibetan understanding of life and death?	Karma is central. It refers to volitional actions and their consequences. Positive actions create positive karma leading to favorable rebirths, while negative actions create negative karma leading to less desirable ones. Understanding karma is key to navigating the cycle of life and death.

4	Are there specific practices in Tibetan Buddhism for preparing for death?	Yes, numerous practices exist. These include meditation on impermanence, cultivating compassion, reciting mantras, generating merit, and receiving blessings. The aim is to purify the mind and develop acceptance and wisdom to face death fearlessly.
5	What is the Tibetan concept of the 'bardo' and its significance?	The bardo refers to the intermediate state between death and rebirth. There are various bardos, with the most significant being the 'bardo of dying' and the 'bardo of becoming.' Tibetan teachings, like the 'Tibetan Book of the Dead,' offer guidance on navigating these states to achieve liberation.
6	How do Tibetan Buddhists view suffering in relation to life and death?	Suffering (dukkha) is seen as an inherent part of the cycle of samsara (existence). Life and death are experienced within this realm of suffering. The ultimate goal is to transcend this cycle and achieve enlightenment, thus ending suffering.
7	Is there a concept of an afterlife or heaven/hell in Tibetan Buddhism?	While not a permanent heaven or hell in the Abrahamic sense, Tibetan Buddhism describes various realms of existence within samsara. These can be pleasurable or painful, influenced by karma. Rebirth into these realms is temporary, and the cycle continues until liberation is attained.
8	How does compassion influence the Tibetan approach to death and dying?	Compassion is paramount. Cultivating compassion for oneself and others throughout life helps purify the mind and create positive karma. During death, extending compassion can ease the transition and benefit both the dying person and those who remain.

9	What is the ultimate goal for a Tibetan Buddhist concerning life and death?	The ultimate goal is to achieve enlightenment (bodhi) or Buddhahood. This signifies liberation from the cycle of birth, death, and rebirth (samsara) and the cessation of all suffering, leading to a state of profound peace and wisdom.
