Key IFRS Areas Covered in Wiley IFRS 2014

While a precise list of every single standard covered in the Wiley IFRS 2014 set would be extensive, we can infer the core areas that would have been central to its content, based on the typical scope of IFRS and the accounting landscape of 2014. These would include:

Revenue Recognition (IAS 18 and IAS 11)

The rules around when and how to recognize revenue are fundamental to financial statements. In 2014, entities would have been applying the existing standards for revenue recognition (IAS 18 for goods and services, and IAS 11 for construction contracts). The upcoming convergence project leading to IFRS 15 (Revenue from Contracts with Customers) was likely a topic of discussion and preparation, even if the full impact wasn't yet felt.

Leases (IAS 17)

Lease accounting has always been a complex area. In 2014, entities were still operating under IAS 17, which distinguishes between operating and finance leases. The subsequent introduction of IFRS 16 (Leases) dramatically changed this landscape, so understanding the application of IAS 17 was crucial for comparability in financial statements prior to the new standard's effective date.

Financial Instruments (IFRS 9 and IAS 39)

The classification, measurement, and impairment of financial instruments have been areas of significant evolution. In 2014, IFRS 9 was in various stages of its phased implementation, with entities starting to adopt its requirements for financial assets and liabilities. The interplay with the older IAS 39 and the upcoming expected credit loss model for impairment would have been a critical area of focus.

Business Combinations (IFRS 3)

Accounting for mergers, acquisitions, and other business combinations is a complex process. IFRS 3 provides detailed guidance on how to account for these transactions, including the identification of the acquirer, recognition of acquired assets and liabilities, and the accounting for goodwill. Practical application issues related to fair value measurement and contingent consideration would have been prominent.

Presentation of Financial Statements (IAS 1)

This fundamental standard sets out the overall requirements for financial statements, including their structure, minimum content, and the presentation of equity. Guidance on issues like materiality, presentation of expenses, and disclosures would have been thoroughly covered.
