When Does a Relationship Die? Recognizing the Signs of a Broken Bond

Is your heart a constant knot, a symphony of unspoken anxieties? Do you find yourself increasingly detached, even resentful, in a relationship that once felt vibrant and alive? You're not alone. The subtle shifts, the creeping distance, the feeling that something fundamental is missing – these are often the first whispers of a relationship on the verge of collapse. Knowing when to acknowledge the inevitable and move forward requires a keen awareness of the signs. This isn't about declaring doom and gloom; it's about empowering you to recognize when a relationship has run its course, allowing you to reclaim your energy and focus on a future filled with potential. Understanding the Language of a Fading Connection Relationships, like living organisms, require constant nurturing and communication to thrive. When one or both partners start neglecting these essential elements, the relationship begins to wither. This isn't necessarily about grand gestures or dramatic breakups. Often, the disintegration is a gradual process, marked by small, consistent shifts in behavior and communication patterns.

The Subtle Shift: Recognizing the Early Warning Signals

- Decreased Quality Time: Remember those spontaneous dinners, weekend getaways, or late-night chats? Are these now rare occurrences, replaced by routine and silence? A noticeable decrease in quality time spent together is a crucial indicator. Research shows that couples who consistently dedicate time to meaningful connection are more likely to experience lasting satisfaction.
- Reduced Communication: Is meaningful conversation replaced by superficial pleasantries? Does your partner seem less interested in your thoughts and feelings? Healthy communication is the bedrock of a thriving relationship. Without it, vulnerability withers, and trust erodes. Studies on conflict resolution techniques consistently highlight the importance of active listening and empathetic responses for long-term relationship health.
- Emotional Distance: Do you feel disconnected from your partner, as if you're two individuals living under the same roof? This emotional detachment is a silent scream for help, a signal that the emotional bonds that once connected you are weakening. Observe the level of empathy shown, the expression of affection, and the willingness to share vulnerabilities. If these have diminished significantly, it's a major red flag.

The Erosion of Trust: Broken Promises and Unresolved Conflict

Trust is the cornerstone of any enduring relationship. Without it, fear and suspicion creep in, poisoning the well.

- Constant Arguments: Do disagreements escalate quickly into heated arguments that leave you feeling unheard and unheard? Relationships that involve consistent negativity and unresolved conflicts, often over minor issues, are in serious jeopardy. This consistently high level of tension is detrimental to long-term happiness and well-being.
- Broken Promises and Unkept Commitments: Frequent broken promises, whether large or small, slowly chip away at trust. A pattern of inconsistent behavior should raise significant red flags. This includes breaking promises related to finances, family time, or even commitments to personal growth within the relationship. • Lack of Respect: Does your partner consistently disrespect your boundaries, your opinions, or your feelings? Respect is fundamental. Without it, the foundation of the relationship crumbles, making it difficult to build a positive future together.

The Unseen Erosion: Change and Personal Growth

Relationships also change with time. Disagreements and personal growth are inevitable; however, a healthy relationship should accommodate for such changes. • Changing Values: One partner might value adventure and exploration, the other, comfort and predictability. If these differing values create insurmountable conflicts and a lack of compromise, the relationship might be unsustainable. • Individual Growth: Personal growth is essential, but it can sometimes strain a relationship. A difference in aspirations, priorities, or career goals might not be inherently negative, but if these differences lead to resentment or frustration, it indicates that the relationship might not be the right fit for the new person you've become. • Lack of Shared Vision for the Future: Do you and your partner have divergent visions for the future, including family, career, or lifestyle? If you have incompatible plans for the next few years, the relationship might struggle to adapt and thrive. When to Walk Away: Recognizing the Red Flags of a Toxic Relationship Not every relationship destined for failure displays subtle signs of deterioration. Some relationships deteriorate through more overt toxic behaviors. • Abuse (Emotional, Physical, or Verbal): If your partner is engaging in any form of abuse, this is an immediate red flag that demands immediate intervention and support. Seeking help is vital, and severing ties with an abusive partner is a brave and necessary step towards your own well-being. • Controlling Behavior: A partner who tries to control your actions, decisions, or social circles is highly controlling and damaging to your individual well-being. • Disregard for Boundaries: Repeated disregard for personal boundaries in areas such as space, time, or feelings is a warning sign that this relationship is ultimately unhealthy.

The Benefits of Recognizing When a Relationship is Over

• Emotional Healing: Acknowledging the end of a relationship allows you to start the healing process, a crucial step toward moving forward. • Reduced Stress and Anxiety: Continuing in a relationship that feels increasingly negative will lead to significant stress and anxiety. Walking away allows you to ease this pressure. • Opportunity for Growth: Breaking free from a failing relationship creates space for personal growth and development. You can pursue your own goals and aspirations. • Reclaiming Your Identity: You can now pursue your own goals and aspirations and re-discover your personal identity. Moving Forward: Strategies for Navigating the Transition It takes courage to acknowledge the end of a relationship and then take the next steps. • Seeking Support: Talk to trusted friends, family, or a therapist. Is there a pattern of declining connection, dwindling trust, or toxic behavior? If the answers point to a relationship that no longer serves you, be courageous enough to acknowledge its end. How Do You Know When the Relationship is Over? Navigating the End of an Era

Ah, relationships. They're beautiful, complex, and at times, incredibly messy. We pour our hearts, souls, and countless hours into them, hoping for a lifelong connection. But what happens when that spark flickers and fades, or when the foundation you built begins to crumble? The question, "How do you know when the relationship is over?" is a heavy one, often whispered in moments of doubt or shouted in the throes of heartbreak. It's rarely a sudden, dramatic movie scene where a definitive pronouncement is made. More often, it's a slow, creeping realization, a series of subtle shifts and nagging feelings that gradually erode the love and connection you once shared. This isn't about blame or assigning fault; it's about honest self-assessment and recognizing when a chapter has reached its natural, albeit painful, conclusion. Figuring out if your relationship has reached its end can be a deeply personal and emotional journey. There's no universal checklist, no magic signpost that screams, "This is it!" However, there are patterns of behavior, recurring themes, and undeniable emotional disconnects that can serve as strong indicators. Let's dive into some of the most common signs that might suggest your relationship has run its course.

The Erosion of Connection: When "We" Becomes "Me"

One of the most telling signs that a relationship is waning is the decline of genuine connection. Remember those effortless conversations, the inside jokes, the feeling of being truly understood? When those become a rarity, it's a red flag.

Loss of Intimacy (Emotional and Physical)

Intimacy is the bedrock of a strong relationship, encompassing not just physical closeness but also emotional vulnerability. When the deep conversations cease, when you no longer share your dreams, fears, and daily triumphs, the emotional chasm widens. Similarly, a significant drop in physical affection, whether it's a lack of intimacy, hugs, or even just holding hands, can signify a deeper disconnect. It's not always about sex; it's about the desire to touch, to comfort, to express love through physical presence.

The Absence of Shared Interests and Goals

In a healthy partnership, couples often find common ground, whether it's a shared hobby, a mutual appreciation for certain activities, or a united vision for the future. When you find yourselves drifting apart in terms of interests, spending less time engaging in activities you once enjoyed together, or developing vastly different life aspirations, it can indicate a growing divergence. This isn't to say you need to be clones of each other, but a lack of shared experiences and future planning can signal that you're no longer on the same path.

Communication Breakdown: The Silence Speaks Volumes

Communication is the lifeblood of any relationship. When communication starts to falter, the relationship is often in trouble. This isn't just about arguments; it's about the quality of your conversations.

Constant Criticism and Contempt

Dr. John Gottman, a renowned relationship researcher, identified "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" as predictors of divorce: criticism, contempt, defensiveness, and stonewalling. If your interactions are consistently laced with criticism (attacking your partner's character) and contempt (expressing disgust or disrespect), it's a toxic dynamic that's difficult to recover from. When you're constantly finding fault and feeling disdain for your partner, the love is likely replaced by resentment.

The Avoidance of Difficult Conversations

Conversely, when difficult conversations are consistently avoided, it can also be a sign of the end. Instead of addressing issues head-on, you might tiptoe around sensitive topics, let resentments fester, or simply accept things as they are, even if they're not good. This passive approach to conflict resolution prevents growth and can lead to a build-up of unresolved issues.

Stonewalling and the Silent Treatment

Stonewalling, the act of withdrawing from a conversation or interaction, can be a relationship killer. When one or both partners shut down, refuse to engage, or give the silent treatment, it creates a wall that's incredibly hard to breach. This signifies an unwillingness or inability to work through problems, a sure sign of a relationship in distress.

The Persistent Feeling of Dissatisfaction: When the Joy Fades

Beyond communication issues, a pervasive sense of unhappiness and dissatisfaction can be a strong indicator that the relationship is nearing its end.

Lack of Excitement and Joy

Remember the butterflies in your stomach, the anticipation of seeing your partner, the simple joy derived from their presence? When those feelings are replaced by apathy, boredom, or a general lack of excitement, it's a significant shift. If spending time with your partner feels more like a chore than a pleasure, or if you no longer look forward to your time together, it's a clear sign that something is amiss.

Feeling Drained Rather Than Energized

A healthy relationship should be a source of support and energy. When you consistently feel drained, exhausted, or depleted after interacting with your partner, it suggests the relationship is taking more than it's giving. This emotional and mental toll can be a powerful indicator that the dynamic is no longer sustainable or healthy for you.

The Unspoken Comparison: "What Ifs" and "Should Haves"

Are you frequently comparing your relationship to others, or dwelling on how things "should" be? This constant internal critique and fantasizing about alternative scenarios can be a sign that you're no longer invested in making your current relationship work. The "what if" game, while natural to some extent, can become destructive when it dominates your thoughts and fuels dissatisfaction.

External Indicators: When You Start to See a Future Apart

Sometimes, the signs are less about the day-to-day dynamics and more about how you envision your future.

Dreaming of a Life Without Them

This is a big one. If you find yourself daydreaming about your life without your partner, envisioning your future in solitude or with someone else, it's a strong indicator that you're emotionally detaching. These fantasies aren't necessarily malicious; they can be a subconscious exploration of what your life might look like if you were no longer in this relationship.

Prioritizing Other Relationships or Activities

When your partner consistently falls to the bottom of your priority list, or when you actively seek out other people or activities to fill your time and emotional needs, it suggests that the relationship is no longer a central focus. This isn't about healthy independence; it's about a deliberate shift in where you invest your emotional energy.

Believing You'd Be Happier Alone

This is a profound realization. If, after honest introspection, you genuinely believe that your overall happiness and well-being would be better served by being single, it's a powerful sign that the relationship has run its course. This doesn't mean you don't love your partner; it means you've concluded that the relationship is no longer conducive to your personal growth and happiness.

When to Seek Professional Help: The Crossroads of Doubt

Recognizing these signs is a crucial first step, but it doesn't always mean the relationship is definitively over. Sometimes, relationships hit rough patches, and with effort, communication, and perhaps professional guidance, they can be mended.

Couples Counseling as a Last Resort (or First Step!)

If you're experiencing many of these signs but still have a desire to try and salvage the relationship, couples counseling can be incredibly beneficial. A neutral third party can help facilitate communication, identify underlying issues, and provide tools for rebuilding connection. It's not a magic bullet, but it offers a structured environment to explore the viability of your partnership.

When the Decision Feels Right (Even if It Hurts)

Ultimately, the decision of whether a relationship is over is a deeply personal one. It comes down to your intuition, your gut feeling, and your honest assessment of whether the relationship is serving your well-being. It's when the thought of staying together brings more dread than hope, when the effort to fix things feels overwhelming and unrewarding, that you might know it's time to let go. The end of a relationship is rarely easy. It's a process of grief, of letting go of a shared future, and of rediscovering yourself as an individual. However, acknowledging when a relationship is over, while painful, can also be the beginning of a new and brighter chapter. It's about honoring your needs, your happiness, and your personal growth. So, if you're asking yourself, "How do you know when the relationship is over?", listen to your heart, observe the patterns, and trust that you have the strength to navigate whatever comes next. Remember, a healthy relationship contributes to your well-being, and sometimes, the greatest act of self-love is recognizing when it's time to move on.

Understanding When a Relationship Ends: Key Signs and Insights In any relationship—romantic, familial, or even long-standing friendships—there comes a moment when the emotional connection weakens, and clarity emerges about whether the bond is still sustainable. Recognizing when a relationship is over is not always straightforward, as emotions often cloud judgment. Yet, paying attention to subtle shifts in behavior, communication, and emotional presence can provide vital clues. These signs serve as indicators that the relationship may no longer supports mutual growth, respect, or happiness. One of the most telling signals is a persistent lack of emotional investment. When both partners consistently withdraw from meaningful conversations, show indifference to each other's joys or struggles, or seem indifferent to future plans together, it reflects a growing emotional distance. This absence of engagement often replaces the warmth and responsiveness that once defined the connection. Over time, the effort to connect feels one-sided, leaving one person carrying the weight of emotional labor. Another important factor is the decline in communication quality. Meaningful dialogue requires vulnerability, active listening, and empathy—qualities that diminish when frustration or resentment dominate interactions. Frequent misunderstandings, defensiveness, or avoidance of sensitive topics reveal a breakdown in the foundation of trust. Instead of resolving conflicts constructively, conversations may devolve into arguments or silence, signaling that deeper issues remain unaddressed. Changes in physical and emotional presence also offer insight. A once-enthusiastic partner may begin canceling plans, seeming distracted during time together, or withdraw from shared activities. This withdrawal is rarely about disinterest in the relationship itself but often reflects internal unwellness—stress, depression, or personal transformation that makes emotional availability difficult. When efforts to reconnect consistently fail, it becomes clear that the relationship no longer fulfills core needs. Trust violations, even if not catastrophic, mark a turning point. Breaches of honesty, broken promises, or repeated lapses in reliability erode the foundation of security. Once trust is compromised, rebuilding requires profound effort, transparency, and time—factors that may no longer be present. The absence of forgiveness or repaired connection underscores that the relationship has crossed a threshold beyond reconciliation. Relationships evolve, and sometimes that evolution means parting ways. Recognizing these signs allows individuals to move forward with clarity rather than confusion or lingering hope. It's not about assigning blame but about honoring one's own well-being and acknowledging that not all bonds are meant to last. The benefits of this awareness include emotional liberation, space for personal growth, and the opportunity to cultivate healthier connections in the future. Looking ahead, the future outlook emphasizes self-awareness and intentional communication. As emotional intelligence becomes increasingly valued, people are learning to listen more deeply and respond with empathy. Technology and modern lifestyles also reshape how relationships unfold—offering both connection and isolation, making mindful presence more critical than ever. Understanding when a relationship has ended is not the end of growth, but the beginning of a more authentic journey.

Navigating the Uncharted Waters: How Do You Know When the Relationship is Over?

The end of a relationship is rarely a sudden, lightning-bolt revelation. More often, it's a slow erosion, a gradual drifting apart, or a series of undeniable cracks that widen over time. For many, the most agonizing part isn't the breakup itself, but the persistent question that echoes in the quiet moments: "How do you know when it's truly over?" This internal inquiry, filled with doubt and a desperate hope for a different answer, can be a paralyzing experience. As a professional journalist, I've spoken to countless individuals who've navigated these turbulent emotional seas. This article aims to provide a comprehensive, analytical guide, offering clarity and actionable insights for those grappling with this profound question.

Understanding when a relationship has reached its expiration date requires introspection, honest observation, and a willingness to confront uncomfortable truths. It's about recognizing patterns, assessing the health of the emotional connection, and evaluating whether the fundamental pillars of partnership remain intact. While every relationship is unique, certain indicators consistently signal that the end may be near, or has already arrived.

The Erosion of Connection: Signs of Emotional Distance

The bedrock of any strong relationship is a deep, emotional connection. When this connection begins to fray, the cracks can be subtle at first, but their cumulative effect can be devastating. One of the most telling signs is a lack of communication. This isn't just about arguments; it's about the absence of meaningful conversation, the sharing of thoughts and feelings, and the vulnerability that fosters intimacy. When you find yourselves talking at each other rather than to each other, or when conversations are superficial and avoidant of deeper issues, it's a red flag. You might notice a decline in shared laughter, inside jokes becoming less frequent, and a general sense of being disconnected from your partner's inner world.

Another significant indicator is the absence of mutual support. In a healthy partnership, partners are each other's biggest cheerleaders, offering comfort during difficult times and celebrating each other's successes. When you feel unsupported, unheard, or that your partner is indifferent to your struggles or triumphs, the foundation of your bond is weakening. This lack of emotional investment can manifest as feeling alone in your relationship, even when you're physically together. The shared dreams and aspirations that once fueled your journey together may also begin to fade, replaced by individual pursuits and a sense of diverging paths.

The Communication Breakdown: When Words No Longer Connect

Communication is the lifeblood of any relationship. When it breaks down, the consequences are far-reaching. This isn't solely about the quantity of communication, but its quality. Are you able to express your needs and desires openly and honestly? Does your partner do the same? Or has the conversation devolved into criticism, defensiveness, contempt, or stonewalling – what relationship expert John Gottman famously termed "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse"? If conflict resolution has become a perpetual cycle of blame and resentment, or if you've simply stopped trying to resolve issues, the communication gap is likely widening into a chasm.

Consider also the decline in active listening. Do you truly hear what your partner is saying, and vice versa? Or are you both just waiting for your turn to speak, rehashing old grievances, or shutting down altogether? This lack of empathetic listening can leave both partners feeling misunderstood and invalidated, further isolating them within the relationship. When the simple act of sharing your day feels like a chore, or when you anticipate negative reactions to your words, it's a clear sign that the pathway for genuine connection has become blocked.

The Fading Spark: Loss of Intimacy and Desire

Intimacy, in its broadest sense, encompasses emotional, physical, and intellectual closeness. A decline in any of these areas can be a profound indicator of a relationship's demise. Physical intimacy is often the most visible symptom. While fluctuations in desire are normal, a consistent and significant drop in sexual intimacy, coupled with a lack of affection, can signal deeper issues. It's not just about the frequency, but the genuine longing and pleasure derived from physical connection. If physical touch feels like an obligation or is completely absent, the emotional distance is likely significant.

Beyond the physical, emotional intimacy can also wane. This is the feeling of being truly seen and accepted by your partner, the comfort of shared vulnerability, and the deep trust that allows you to be your authentic self. If you find yourself withholding parts of yourself, feeling guarded, or unable to confide in your partner, the emotional intimacy has likely diminished. Similarly, intellectual intimacy, the enjoyment of shared ideas, stimulating conversations, and a mutual curiosity about each other's minds, can also fade. When you no longer find your partner interesting or engaging, the foundation for shared growth and exploration crumbles.

When "Us" Becomes "Me" and "You"

A healthy relationship thrives on a sense of "we" – a shared identity, common goals, and a collective vision for the future. When this shifts to a pervasive sense of "me" and "you," it signifies a critical disconnect. This can manifest in several ways. Firstly, a lack of shared activities or interests. You no longer enjoy spending time together, pursuing hobbies, or engaging in activities that once brought you joy as a couple. Instead, your social lives and leisure time become increasingly separate, reinforcing individual identities over a shared one. This isn't to say that independent interests are unhealthy, but when they completely eclipse shared experiences, it's a warning sign.

Secondly, consider the future vision. Do you still see yourselves building a future together? Are your long-term plans aligned? Or have your individual aspirations diverged so significantly that they no longer intersect? When one or both partners are no longer investing in the future of the relationship, or when future plans explicitly exclude the other, it's a clear indication that the relationship's trajectory is heading towards an end. This can be particularly painful when one partner is ready to move on while the other remains invested, or vice versa. The absence of a shared vision is a powerful harbinger of separation.

The Weight of Resentment: Unresolved Conflicts and Unhappiness

Resentment is a corrosive emotion that can slowly poison even the most loving relationships. When unresolved conflicts fester, they create a build-up of bitterness and a sense of being perpetually wronged. If you find yourself constantly replaying past hurts, holding grudges, and feeling a deep sense of unfairness, it's likely that resentment has taken root. This can manifest as cynicism, passive-aggression, or a general feeling of being unappreciated and undervalued.

The pervasive feeling of unhappiness is another critical indicator. While no relationship is without its challenges, a chronic state of discontent, anxiety, or sadness when you're with your partner, or even when you think about the relationship, is a sign that something is fundamentally wrong. This isn't about occasional bad days; it's about a consistent emotional toll that the relationship is taking on your well-being. When the joy has been replaced by dread, and the anticipation of spending time together is met with a sinking feeling, it's time to honestly assess the relationship's health.

The "What If" Game and the Lack of Effort

The "what if" game is a dangerous rabbit hole. If you find yourself constantly fantasizing about life without your partner, or wondering "what if" you were with someone else, it signifies a deep dissatisfaction with your current reality. These thoughts, while sometimes fleeting, can become persistent when the relationship is no longer meeting your needs or bringing you fulfillment. This internal questioning often precedes external action.

Crucially, observe the lack of effort. Relationships require ongoing investment from both partners. This includes making time for each other, actively working through challenges, showing appreciation, and demonstrating a commitment to growth. When one or both partners stop making an effort, when the relationship feels like a burden rather than a joy, it's a strong signal that the relationship is either dying or already dead. This lack of investment can be subtle – less planning of dates, fewer check-ins, a decline in gestures of affection – but its cumulative effect is immense.

Red Flags You Can't Ignore: Betrayal and Abuse

While the aforementioned signs are often gradual, some indicators are immediate and unequivocally signal the end. Betrayal, in any form, whether it's infidelity, dishonesty, or a violation of trust, can irrevocably damage a relationship. While some couples can work through infidelity with immense effort and commitment to rebuilding trust, for many, the wound is too deep to heal. The question then becomes whether the foundation of trust can ever be truly restored.

Even more critically, any form of abuse – emotional, physical, or psychological – is never acceptable and is an immediate reason to end the relationship. Abuse is about power and control, and it has no place in a healthy partnership. If you are experiencing any form of abuse, your safety and well-being are paramount. Seeking support from trusted friends, family, or professional organizations is crucial. There is no "how do you know" when it comes to abuse; the answer is always that it is over.

The Gut Feeling: Trusting Your Intuition

Beyond the observable signs, there's the undeniable power of intuition. Often, deep down, you already know. You might be trying to rationalize, to hold onto hope, or to avoid the pain of a breakup, but your gut feeling is a powerful compass. If the thought of the relationship ending brings a sense of relief rather than sadness, or if you consistently feel a sense of dread or anxiety about your partner or the future of the relationship, it's worth paying attention to that inner voice. This intuition is often the culmination of all the subtle, and not-so-subtle, signals you've been receiving.

Moving Forward: Acceptance and Healing

Recognizing when a relationship is over is the first, and often most difficult, step. The process of ending a relationship is rarely neat or painless. It involves acknowledging the reality of the situation, communicating your decision with as much kindness and respect as possible, and allowing yourself the space to grieve. The healing process is unique to each individual, but it often involves self-care, reconnecting with friends and family, rediscovering your own interests, and seeking professional support if needed. Understanding the signs of a dying relationship isn't about finding fault; it's about gaining clarity, making informed decisions about your well-being, and ultimately, paving the way for a healthier and happier future, whether that's as a healed individual or in a new, more fulfilling partnership.

Questions & Answers About how do you know when the relationship is over

No	Question	Answer
1	When is it time to admit the relationship is probably over?	When you consistently feel unhappy, drained, or resentful more often than you feel joy, connection, or peace. If the effort to maintain happiness outweighs the reward, it's a strong indicator.
2	What are the biggest red flags that signal a relationship's end?	Consistent lack of communication, feeling constantly criticized or unsupported, different life goals that can't be reconciled, and a persistent absence of intimacy (emotional or physical) are major red flags.
3	How do I know if it's just a rough patch or truly the end?	Rough patches involve active effort from both sides to understand, apologize, and rebuild trust. If one or both partners are checked out, unwilling to engage, or the issues are fundamental and unresolvable, it's likely more than a patch.
4	When does the 'spark' dying mean the relationship is over?	The spark naturally evolves. If it's gone and replaced by indifference, a lack of desire to connect, or a feeling of obligation rather than genuine affection, it might be over. However, some couples find deeper connection after the initial spark fades.
5	What if I still love them, but the relationship feels finished?	Love can exist even when a relationship is no longer healthy or fulfilling. This often happens when core needs aren't being met, or when you've grown into different people. It's possible to love someone and realize you're not compatible for a long-term future.
6	How much arguing is too much when considering ending things?	Constant, unresolved conflict where arguments become personal attacks, disrespectful, or repetitive without progress is a sign. If arguments leave you feeling worse and don't lead to solutions, it can be a drain on the relationship.
7	When should I stop trying to fix it and accept it's over?	When all attempts at communication, compromise, and professional help (like couples therapy) have failed to yield positive, sustained change, and both partners are consistently unhappy or resentful. If the relationship consistently detracts from your well-being, it's time to consider ending it.

8	Is it over if I find myself fantasizing about being single or with someone else?	While occasional daydreams are normal, persistent and intense fantasies about a different life or partner can indicate deep dissatisfaction in your current relationship. It suggests your needs aren't being met, or you feel a lack of fulfillment that might be worth exploring beyond the relationship.
