The protagonist, a nameless man who chooses to live inside a cardboard box, eschews societal norms and embraces a form of radical self-imposed confinement. This act of sequestration is not merely a physical retreat but a philosophical one, a deliberate attempt to shed the trappings of conventional identity and experience a purer form of existence.

Abe masterfully employs surrealism and dark humor to convey the protagonist's descent into this unconventional lifestyle. The narrative unfolds through the man's first-person account, detailing his daily routines within his cardboard sanctuary, his observations of the outside world, and his philosophical musings. 3. Existentialism and Absurdity: Abe's work often delves into existentialist territory, presenting a world where meaning is not inherent but must be actively created, or in this case, rejected.
