2	Who decided on the 'Seven Wonders of the Modern World', and what was the process?	The list was compiled by a Swiss foundation, New7Wonders Foundation, through a worldwide poll that concluded in 2007. Millions of votes were cast via internet and phone for a shortlist of 200 existing monuments.
3	Can you name the official 'Seven Wonders of the Modern World' for us?	Certainly! The official Seven Wonders of the Modern World are: The Great Wall of China, Petra in Jordan, Christ the Redeemer in Brazil, Machu Picchu in Peru, Chichen Itza in Mexico, the Colosseum in Italy, and the Taj Mahal in India.

5	Is there a 'wonder' that is no longer on the list or was a finalist but didn't make it?	Yes, the Pyramids of Giza in Egypt were granted honorary status, making them an 'honorary candidate' rather than part of the official seven. This acknowledges their status as the sole surviving ancient wonder.

6	How accessible are these modern wonders for tourists, and what's the best way to plan a visit?	Accessibility varies. Many are popular tourist destinations with well-developed infrastructure, while others might require more adventurous travel. Planning ahead, booking flights and accommodations in advance, and considering local guides are highly recommended.
7	Are there any controversies or criticisms surrounding the 'Seven Wonders of the Modern World' list?
