Peru's Trifecta: Coast, Andes, and Amazon

Peru is a land of three distinct and dramatic regions:

1. The Coastal Desert: A narrow strip of arid land along the Pacific Ocean, home to Peru's major cities like Lima and Trujillo, and dotted with ancient archaeological sites. This region is characterized by dry valleys, sand dunes, and a cool ocean current.
2. The Andes Mountains: The majestic spine of South America runs through Peru, creating breathtaking landscapes of snow-capped peaks, deep canyons, and fertile valleys. This is the land of the Incas, of high-altitude agriculture, and of vibrant indigenous cultures. Think of iconic locations like Machu Picchu, Lake Titicaca, and the Colca Canyon.

3. The Amazon Rainforest: Eastern Peru is dominated by the Amazon, a vast and biologically rich jungle that represents a significant portion of the country's territory. Brazil's Expansive Dominance: Amazon and Beyond

Brazil's geography is equally diverse but tends to be characterized by its sheer scale and its dominant natural features:

1. The Amazon Rainforest: The undisputed king of Brazil's geography, the Brazilian Amazon is the largest portion of the rainforest and home to an unparalleled array of flora and fauna. It's a region of immense natural beauty and critical ecological importance.
2. The Cerrado: A vast tropical savanna region located in central Brazil, known for its unique biodiversity and as a major agricultural area.
