The Iron Horse's Ascent: From Schoolboy Star to Yankee Icon

Born Henry Louis Gehrig on June 19, 1903, in New York City, "Lou" Gehrig's journey to baseball stardom was almost preordained. A prodigious talent from a young age, his prowess on the diamond was evident during his school years. He earned an athletic scholarship to Columbia University, where he continued to develop his skills, attracting the attention of major league scouts. It wasn't long before the legendary New York Yankees, a team already boasting titans like Babe Ruth, recognized the immense potential of this powerful left-handed hitter.

Gehrig's Major League Baseball (MLB) debut came in 1923, and he quickly established himself as a formidable force. His signature was his consistency and durability, earning him the moniker "The Iron Horse." For 17 consecutive seasons, he played in an astonishing 2,130 consecutive games, a record that stood for over half a century and remains a remarkable feat of athletic endurance.
